THE TRANSPLANTING OF LARGE TREES

It is no new thing to transplant trees of considerable size, for this has been done in all parts of the world and for hundreds of years. We are told in an article contributed to The American Inventor (New York, August), that in 1636 the governor of Brazil transplanted one hundred oak trees more than sixty feet tall, and over seventy years old, transporting them many miles on wagons, and by raft across two rivers. The trees bore fruit during the first year after being transplanted. In England, in 1880, two noted trees, a yew and a cedar of Lebanon, each 1,100 years old, and weighing about sixty tons, were successfully transplanted. Remarkable work in large tree transplanting has been done in Paris. The foreign method, Mr. Clegg says, has always been to dig a trench about the tree, then by undermining the earth and roots to place heavy timbers under them; the trees are then jacked up and put upon wagons or rollers to be hauled at great expense to their destination. In this country most early attempts in this line were failures. A transplanter was patented in 1887, but, according to Mr. Clegg, it has lacked success owing to the fact that it lifts or pulls the tree by its trunk, injuring the bark and generally resulting in its death. He goes on to say:

"Years of experience showed that the failures in large tree transplanting result mostly from injuries received by the bark on the trunk of the tree; either by severe bending of the trunk or the breaking of the bark where the tree comes in contact with the fulcrum over which the tree is forced from the ground.

"The bark is the most tender as well as the most vital part of the tree, a fact well known to the rabbit as well as to the farmer. Just as well might a rope be tied around the neck of a man to pull him from the pit as to use any device that will injure the fiber or bark of the tree.

"The florist, the most successful transplanter, prepares his plant by confining the roots and earth in a pot that may be moved undisturbed at any time in the year, therefore seldom loses a plant. If the florist's method is successful with the plant should it not be equally so when applied to trees?"

The methods that have been so successful abroad are embodied, the author says, in a newly invented machine devised by John A. Wilkens of Indiana, which avoids handling the trees by their trunks. This transplanter and its operation are thus described by Mr. Clegg:

"The machine is composed, first, of a steel platform from four and one-half to six feet in diameter, fitted around the tree and securely bolted. It is equipped with properly arranged steel guides through which steel concave shovels are driven down around the platform, by use of a maul, the large machine having sixteen and the medium twelve of these shovels. They are sharp and have corrugated edges, so that when driven down they cut off all roots which project beyond the circle desired to be taken up. When these shovels are all in place they are secured to the platform by means of a steel ring and locks. The roots of the tree and the earth in which they grow are thus confined in a steel basket. The transporter, which plays an important part in the successful moving of trees, is also ingeniously constructed of steel, and is circular in form, having an opening in the rear. After the machine is placed about the tree, the opening is securely closed, and by means of properly arranged hoists, two men can lift the basket with the tree and earth to the required height; then the tree is, by the same power, laid back upon a cushion and is ready for transportation.

"No strain of any kind is put upon the tree. The bark and fiber are not injured. A tree of the larger size can be moved without placing the hand upon the tree.

"When the tree has been transported to the desired place, for transplanting, it is placed over the hole where it is to be planted in such manner as to plant it exactly as it grew as to the points of the compass. The excavation may be twelve inches greater in diameter than the basket containing the tree, and should be deeper than where it grew. The tree is then placed in an upright position by means of the hoist, and the basket is lowered into the ground. While still being held in proper position rich soil is placed about the basket and properly tamped, thus holding the basket firmly about the roots and earth, after which the shovels are removed one at a time, care being taken to see that even the small spaces left by the removal of the shovels are properly closed by means of a spade.

"One of the important features of this method of transplanting is the thorough wetting of the roots and earth about the tree before taking up. This should be done at least one day before removal. By this means the roots and earth are in the best possible condition for transplanting. Trees treated by the above method can be successfully transplanted during any month of the year, the spring and fall being preferred. Leaves upon the trees thus treated do not wilt, as the method does not admit of cutting the tops so as to destroy the beauty of the natural shape of the tree."

THE CHANGE OF LIFE

INTELLIGENT WOMEN PREPARE

Dangers and Pain of This Critical Period
Avoided by the Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

How many women realize that the most critical period in a woman's existence is the change of life, and that the anxiety felt by women at this time draws near is not without reason?

If her system is in a deranged condition, or she is predisposed to apoplexy or congestion of any organ, it is at this time likely to become active and, with a host of nervous irritations, make life a burden.

At this time, also, cancers and tumors are more liable to begin their destructive work. Such warning symptoms as a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, dizziness, headache, dread of impending evil, sounds in the ears, timidity, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period of life when woman's great change may be expected.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the world's greatest remedy for women at this trying period, and may be relied upon to overcome all distressing symptoms and carry them safely through to a healthy and happy old age.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound invigorates and strengthens the female organism, and builds up the weakened nervous system as no other medicine can.

Mrs. A. E. G. Hyland, of Chester-town, Md., in a letter to Mrs. Pinkham, says:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"I had been suffering with falling of the womb for years and was passing through the change of life. My womb was badly swollen. I had a good deal of soreness, dizzy spells, headaches, and was very nervous. I wrote you for advice and commenced treatment with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as you directed, and I am happy to say that all those distressing symptoms left me, and I have passed safely through the change of life a well woman."

For special advice regarding this important period women are invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham for advice. It is free and always helpful.

Probably the most popular person on the lecture platform in Germany today is Professor Haeckel. Yet he makes no claim to being an orator. In the preface to his latest volume, containing his Berlin lectures, which created such a sensation, he declares that nature has denied him the gift of eloquent speech, and that, although he has taught eighty-eight semesters at the University of Jena, he has never been able to overcome a certain timidity in appearing before an audience. For this reason he has seldom attended meetings of naturalists.
